PRESS RELEASE

Forensics 101 to offer Free Crime Scene Experiences to Public School Science Students

(CHARLOTTE, NC- April 12, 2010) Forensics 101 understands that in these tough economic times, educational institutions are feeling the effects of budgetary constraints. Forensics 101 believes that regardless of financial situations, science should remain at the forefront of every student's academic career, and we would like to help... for FREE.

With the help of donations and sponsorships Forensics 101 will offer our mobile crime scene experiences for free to public school science classes. Teachers will follow their current forensic science curriculum or work with Forensics 101 to develop a forensic science curriculum. At the end of the forensic science unit, Forensics 101 will work closely with teachers and school officials to bring a dynamic mobile crime scene experience to students that is both hands on and exciting. These crime scene experiences will be unique and will be based on the curriculum that students recently completed in the classroom.

Forensics 101, Inc is a nonprofit science enrichment organization dedicated to offering a wide variety of forensic science workshops, classes, camps and crime scene experiences for the advancement of science education.

Our mission is to not only educate, but to stimulate a sense of excitement about science and to encourage continuous learning and advancement in science.

Christina Brooks, executive director of Forensics 101, Inc., is a forensic anthropologist. She earned her graduate degree from the University of Tennessee, Knoxville, home of the legendary Body Farm and Dr Bill Bass. In addition to being executive director of Forensics 101, she is also a professor at Winthrop University in Rock Hill, SC and an adjunct at UNC-Charlotte.
